“Project Runway” veteran Chris March celebrated the publication of his book “I Heart Chris March” at Greenhouse (January 24). It was a fun party which segued into Suzanne Bartsch’s soiree that brought out those tireless drags, twinks, and club vets, sparked by Dan Fortune’s classy DJ stylings, which were lively and actually enhanced conversation.

Joey Arias and Basil Twist told me they’re doing a new show that they’re previewing in Germany.

March was thrilled to design Meryl Streep’s Golden Globe gown: “I knew her hair/ makeup team and they made the intro. She’s the nicest, most down-to-earth person, who hates to shop, so we whipped this up out of some heavy silk that was almost like a brocade, and I belted it for freshness. We had a ball playing with accessories for it.

“We all complained non-stop about being on ‘Project Runway’ — the lack of privacy, the bad food, etc. But they told us, after this you will be famous, guaranteed. And guess what? It’s true. My blog received a million hits in one day, and right now I’m developing two reality shows.”
